Purpose of this interlinear translation of the Torah.

The reason I have undertaken to make this interlinear Torah available, is to aid those who desire to learn the Hebrew language, and also to aid in a better understanding of the Torah. My original reason for translating the Torah was purely for the satisfying of my own hunger for Yah's word and to have a better understanding of the Hebrew language. I started out by purchasing an interlinear Hebrew Tanach. When I wasn't satisfied with that one, I purchased another. The problem I found, was that it did not aid me in my desire to learn the Hebrew language better. This was due largely to the inconsistencies in translations of every interlinear Tanach that I have seen up to the time of my writing this forward. It's not that I am saying that all the translations that I have seen are poor translations. That is not my meaning. I have seen good translations. It's just that they aren't made for the purpose of helping the reader learn the Hebrew language. Even in a great translation there are sometimes dozens of English words chosen to translate the same Hebrew word. The translators choose many different English words to represent one Hebrew word in order to make it read smoothly in English. Hebrew thought and language is much different than English thought and language. Therefore the English translator chooses an English word that best helps the sentence read smoothly in English, even though the English word may not best represent the Hebrew word. When you are reading an interlinear translation, you read the Hebrew word and then the English word under it, and then the next time you come across the same Hebrew word, it may be translated with yet another English word. This may continue dozens of times. The end result is that you will not be able to make a concrete connection between a Hebrew word and its true meaning, for the lack of consistency. A good example of this is the Hebrew word "asah" which means—"to do, or to make". In the most common English translation this Hebrew word is translated into at least seventy-five different English words. It is translated with such words as: accomplish, advance, appoint, apt, be at, become, bear, bestow, bring forth, bruise, busy, have charge of, commit, deal with, deck, do, dress, execute, exercise, fashion, fighting-man, fit, fly, follow, fulfill, furnish, gather, get, go about, govern, grant, great, hold, keep, labor, maintain, make, be meet, observe, be occupied, offer, pare, bring to pass, perform, practice, prepare, procure, provide, put, requite, serve, set, shew, spend, take, trim, be a warrior, yield, use, etc. I think this list makes my point very well. It is therefore, extremely difficult to ever understand or memorize the meaning of that Hebrew word. There is an old saying that says "repetition is the key to learning". It is through the consistent hearing or reading of a concept that it becomes well understood by our minds and hearts. It's not that some of the different ways that a word is translated are necessarily incorrect, but that the inconsistency does not lend itself very well to learning.

Another reason I desired a different translation, was the fact that most Hebrew words have more than one meaning. These meanings are sometimes closely related, and in other cases are VERY different from one another. An example of this would be "erev". This Hebrew word can mean: evening, ravens, swarms, mixture, sweet, Arab people, etc. The only way you would be able to know which meaning is the intended meaning is the context. Sometimes the English translation will choose one meaning for you from a Hebrew word, but there is actually more than one meaning that will make sense in the context. The translator feels "forced" to choose for you the meaning of the word, even though the other translation may actually be the intended meaning. By so doing, the translator may be inserting his own opinions or theologies into the text rather than the correct translation, or maybe he is just making an honest mistake. Either way the reader suffers in his misunderstanding of the Scripture. It is unavoidable that every English translation is somewhat of an "interpretation", rather than a translation. The translator's views will always affect how he translates passages to agree with his beliefs. Since this version is translated the same throughout, regardless of context, my beliefs are not able to be inserted or manipulated into the text. I approach the words of the Torah, as well as all of the Scriptures from the basis that they are breathed by Elohim, and have been infallibly and miraculously preserved for us (only in their original language) as a love letter from Him. I believe it from the first word until the last word. Kadosh men of Elohim were moved and carried to write the exact words that they did, as one does who is taking dictation from another. So great is our Elohim, that He is able to preserve His word for us unblemished and undefiled.

"Upon thus, I consider all your precepts concerning all things to be straight (right); I have hated every way of falsehood."

Psalms 119:128

What is different about this interlinear translation.

The main differences in this interlinear translation that make it different from every other translation that I know of are:

1.) It is much more consistent in translation. In every place throughout the entire Tanach that a Hebrew word is given in a SPECIFIC FORM, with its added prefixes and suffixes, i.e. – verb tense, possessive tense, etc.; it will have the exact same English translation under it, without exception. Certain tenses and forms of a word will sometimes change the meaning of a word, and therefore the translation may not be exactly the same when the same word appears in a different tense or form, but it will be consistent in its specific form. When a word has a different tense that does not change the meaning of a word, I have attempted to stay consistent in its translation, but there may be minor variations due to space, and the need to stay somewhat concise in the translation. As it is, this interlinear Torah translation is approximately 700 pages in its current font size. That is just for the first five books of the Tanach.

2.) It does not give the reader only one of the possible meanings of a Hebrew word, but rather all of the MAIN meanings of that word. To give all of the possible meanings of every word, would render the size of this Book to be too large to accomplish, or to print, and would defeat the purpose of making a translation that would help the reader learn the Hebrew language.

3.) Perhaps this translation is different in the way that I arrived at the English translation of a Hebrew word. In this "maaseh" (work, labor) I have looked up EVERY Hebrew word as it appears in Scripture, and every tense that it appears in throughout the Tanach and have looked up in many, perhaps most cases- every instance that it appears in the entire Tanach in that specific form (added suffixes, prefixes, and inserted letters in the midst of a word). This has taken thousands of hours of studying (4 years just to translate Genesis). By searching either all, or many of the instances of every word, I have let Scripture define Scripture. The context of Scripture is its best dictionary. If you want to know what a word really means, read how it is used in context over and over again. Its meaning will become concrete to you. Thus I have let Scripture be its own dictionary. I do not say that I looked up every instance, every time, because some words in specific tenses occur literally hundreds or even thousands of times. In these cases, I have searched through a large number of the occurrences of those words in their contexts, and when I was satisfied that I understood its meaning, I ceased searching that particular word out.

4.) This translation is not an "easy read". One reason that translations choose many different English words to represent a Hebrew word is for the purpose of making it an easier read. A sentence may make perfect sense in Hebrew language and idiom, but this may not translate well into English thought. Therefore, in most English translations, word order and sentence structure are changed, as well as word definitions in order to make a more sensible English sentence. I have not done this. I have translated the Hebrew literally, even when it doesn't translate well into English thinking. This is a very literal translation. I have endeavored to find and use the most basic and original meaning of a word, while listing derived meanings as well. True, there may be other implied meanings of words and idioms, but I have left the translation as literal and concrete as I could, which will require thinking on the part of the reader. If you do not like to think or study, then I recommend that you trade this translation in for another book where someone else will do your thinking for you. Elohim made you to think, and to devour His word. Chew on the "cud" of His word for a while and be "clean". You will be made clean through the Word that HE has spoken to you. Much of the trouble in the "body" / assemblies is due to the minority of men doing the thinking for the majority of the rest. We have been given the Ruach HaKodesh (Holy Spirit) so that He can teach us and lead us into all truth. Without His Ruach, we will not understand His Torah.

Another reason this translation does not “read easy”, is that since a Hebrew word may have more than one meaning, and I have listed these meanings, you will not be able to continue reading a sentence till you have figured out which meaning is intended by the context, since they are all listed. I am including a “key” for understanding and reading this translation, to help the reader.

Names and titles

Due to the many different ways of pronouncing the “Sacred Name” and the tradition of some to not say the name, I have decided to use Y H W H, to represent the Hebrew equivalent letters Yod, Hey, Waw, Hey. I recognize no prohibition to speak the name of the Creator inside of the Scriptures. I only recognize that this prohibition exists among the traditions of men. Let the reader do according to his conviction. It is not my desire to conform to any particular mode of translating the tetragrammaton to please any particular group. By translating it into English equivalents I am not forcing my own understanding or pronunciation on the reader, and that “YHWH” will not be offensive to most readers. I refuse to REPLACE the Yod, Hey, Waw, Hey with a translation that it DEFINITELY does not mean, such as “Ha Shem”, “Adonai” or “LORD” etc. For it definitely DOES NOT mean these words, and I would be guilty of “adding to, or taking from” the Word of the Living Elohim. The Hebrew words, HaShem and Adonai appear many times in Scripture, and the Author of the Torah could have used these words if He had so chosen, but instead He used His own personal NAME. I leave it this way without being so presumptuous that He expects me to change what He wrote!

For the word “Elohim”, I have translated it as pronounced in Hebrew. For those that are ignorant of this word, I also wrote G-d for their understanding, but left a dash between the G and d, in order not to equate the true Elohim with a name of a false deity. The English word “God” is actually the personal name of a false Teutonic Deity, and is not suitable for referring to the Real Deity, even though this word is now a generic title in the English language, and does not have this connection in the mind of the average person using this word. Elohim is a title. It is not a name for the Creator. There is only One true Elohim. All others are false, and do not exist. There are not “three” or “many” Elohims being referred to when this title is used. He is ONE. (see Deut. 6:4) The word Elohim is in the plural form but does not imply a plurality of persons. In the Hebrew language this usage of a plural form for a singular object is considered a plurality to express the GREATNESS of something. For example the word Behemoth is used to describe a singular creature in the Book of Yob (Job). Because of the MASSIVENESS of this creature He is called a behemoth (literally – “beasts”). The singular form of this word is “behemah”. This particular animal is called in its plural form due to its size. We know that the animal described in Yob is singular due to the personal pronoun “hu” (he) that is used in connection with the creature. The text does not use the word for they. So we know that it is singular. The word Elohim is used similarly. Thousands of times it is used with the personal pronoun “he” rather than “they”. By this, we know that “Elohim” is the form for the plurality of MAJESTY, and not for a plurality or “Trinity” of beings.

In contrast, whenever the word “Elohim” is used to refer to “other deities” it is always accompanied by the personal pronoun for “they” denoting that false deities are many, though they are the work of the imaginations of men and devils. In very rare cases the pronoun “us” or “we” is used to refer to the True Creator. This is done by the equivalent of 0.3 of 1 percent. That is one third of a single percent. It is EXTREMELY RARE, and should not be used to build a false doctrine. In these cases the answer is as simple as HIM being the head of great hosts of angels and a Kingdom. He speaks as the Head of hosts (tseva’ot), representing them too. In several of the instances where the pronouns “we” or “us” appear, the words “YHWH of hosts” occurs in connection with it. This rare occurrence of the plural pronoun is explained as simply as YHWH speaking for them.

The upright ones will not err in His Ways, even if they are simple, but those that are defiled and deceived will err in judgment and follow the wrong way and will twist the Word to their own destruction. The Torah will be misused and misunderstood by those that do not have the Ruach (Spirit) of YHWH dwelling within them. So be it. They are appointed to this end because of their own evil imaginations.

Hebrew Rules of Grammar

The Hebrew student will find that at times (fairly rare) I have listed a translation that seems to break certain rules of grammar. One of the common ones will be that sometimes a verb will be given in a perfect (past) tense or a future / present tense form and I will translate it as such, but then I give an alternate tense that does not agree with the "grammatical rule" for the tense. I have done this because at some places (even though sometimes rare) the context has absolutely required the opposite tense than what the verb form called for. There are past tense forms that are speaking specifically of an action that has not happened yet, and visa versa. I do not consider these to be errors in the text, but errors in what has been "boxed up" as a rule of grammar. Though the rules of grammar are important for understanding and usually accurate, they are deeper than the understanding that men put on them. The Author has not made errors. He has put in deeper meanings and reasons at times in the text, and we should try to figure out why. Whenever anything seems to not make sense to us out of the Scriptures, we should consider that it is our understanding that is faulty, not His Word. It is pride and presumption to call anything in His Word wrong, subject to our understanding. Be humble and He will clear up the things you don't understand.

Notes concerning this translation

This translation is a first addition. I have no doubts that there is still room for improvement concerning this work. Although, proofreading has been done, I am sure that some errors in typing still exist. This is a pilot work, and I hope for correspondence with those reading this book. I am also sure that there are places where the translation could be made somewhat more clear, or made to read better. Suggestions are welcome. Where there may be questions concerning the translation that has been made, I will be glad to respond to why the translation reads as it does in any place. There will be places where the translation I made, breaks certain "grammar rules", such as verb tense. Usually when this is the case, it is because the context demanded a breaking of a particular rule. In rare cases though, it may be due to a typo error. I hope that feedback will help in making an even more accurate and more user friendly, and further edited version in the future.

The English translation reads right to left just like the Hebrew. The only difference of course, is that the English words are still spelled left to right. The feature of the English reading right to left, is very easy to change, but I hope that by adjusting to reading right to left, the reader will "abar" (cross over) to a Hebrew way of reading and thinking. Also, by making the English text read from right to left, I am able to "drop down" the English translation to reflect Hebrew sentence structure better. Instead of "and his son", the translation attempts to follow the Hebrew order "and son of him". Thus the added prefixes and suffixes can be recognized for their meaning in connection to the word they are attached to. It was not possible to "drop down" the translation in all cases, because in some cases, this would render the English phrase very difficult to understand.

The way that this translation flows will take an adjustment in reading habits and a good understanding of certain symbols used in the translation. Attempting to read this translation without familiarizing yourself with the symbols explained in the Key, will render the translation difficult to understand. Let not the reader despair that he or she will not be able to understand translation, or comprehend what they are reading. The brain is amazing how YHWH made it. It will adjust and learn. The reading may seem somewhat difficult to read at first, but will become easier after spending some time using this translation and adjusting to using the symbols. It won't be long until this translation can be read similarly as another interlinear translation.

Learning Hebrew while studying the Scriptures

I am of the opinion that a person can be fairly proficient in reading Hebrew in about six months by simply memorizing a basic suffix and prefix chart and by reading the Torah daily (not to mention that this is commanded to us anyway – Joshua 1:9, Psalms 1). Whatever you do daily will become natural. It is virtually impossible to get a good grasp on reading Hebrew by reading a primer or taking a class for only an hour or two per week. At that rate it will take many years to do what you can accomplish in six months by just reading the scriptures daily with the aid of a consistently translated Hebrew-English interlinear translation. This is one of the purposes that this translation has been created. It will hopefully aid in memorization of the meanings of the words and the meanings of prefixes and suffixes by the repetitious and consistent way this version has been translated. It is completely consistent in its translation of any particular word in any particular form. This Hebrew Interlinear Torah is made specifically to help the Hebrew student learn the language, while studying and reading the scriptures.

My own attempt to learn Hebrew began by using college course materials and aids. When I first started learning Hebrew by the usual common methods, I found myself very challenged and hindered in the speed I was able to learn. Terms such as; “passive”, “jussive”, “imperative”, “participle”, “infinitive construct”, “infinitive absolute”, “intensified action”, “strong”, or “weak”, “stative”, “sufformative”, “preformative”, “imperfect paradigm”, “hollow”, “geminate”, “cohortive”, “participle”, and so on….only served to “muddy the water” for me. I soon realized that I needed to be an English Major in order to understand some of the material. It seemed “out of my reach”. Outside of a College degree in the right field, the average person will shrink away from the seemingly daunting task of learning Hebrew through some of the current methods, because of the placing of the knowledge “out of reach”. Also, the time to learn has been amplified by the many charts of the verb forms and vowel pointings, which go beyond the simpler use of the original prefixes and suffixes that were given in the Scriptures. I am a firm believer in “putting the cookies on the bottom shelf”, where everyone can reach them.

As I studied, I arrived at the point where I felt that it could be years before I could implement what I learned, into actually reading the scriptures in Hebrew. I couldn’t stay diligent enough in studying the Hebrew primer book and course materials, because it did not put me into the scriptures, which was my original reason for learning Hebrew in the first place. It is the Word of YHWH and His person that has captured my heart and enticed me. Learning Hebrew is a tool I felt I needed, to know His Word and Him better. After a little while of using the Hebrew course materials, I ended up dropping all of them, and began reading and translating the Hebrew Scriptures as a method of learning. I learned all the verb forms and possessive forms without a primer or course materials by doing this. The only difference is that I began learning a lot faster, because I was finally devouring Elohim’s word while learning the language. It is His Word that holds my interest, and thus I was inspired to spend more time at learning Hebrew. This became one of the ways that I fulfilled the command to be in the Word day and night. I started out by reading and studying one verse at a time and understanding its meaning. In a short while I was able to do several verses. It doesn’t take long before you can easily read a chapter a day in Hebrew. If you can only commit to one class a week, then you may as well accept that you may not understand enough, to read Hebrew for a very long time. If you will commit to reading every day, it won’t be long before you are able to read and understand the Hebrew well enough to only have to refer to the English translation occasionally to clarify words that are not commonly used. You will find that you use the English translation less and less as time goes on.

Why no vowel points?

Modern Hebrew has seven verb forms. Some of these depend on the changing of the vowel pointings only. These usually have to do with whether or not an action is “simple”, or “intensified”. I don’t recognize that these differences can be verified in the text of scripture by anything else but context. The vowel pointings are not original to the Hebrew text, but are added by scribes at a later date (approx. 11th century A.D.). In this translation, the vowel pointings are not used, keeping with the original form the scriptures were given in. Also, vowel points determine the meanings of words, which may or may not be correct. When the Hebrew text is vowel pointed, it gives place for errors to be made in the meaning of the text. A word is defined by its vowel points in a Hebrew text, but with a Hebrew text without vowel points, the meaning is determined by context, that way nobody’s opinion of the scripture can be inserted into the text.

Although, I consider the vowel pointings to be unnecessary when reading Hebrew, I do feel that they can be helpful to a person that wants to learn to speak correctly, if that person does not know the language. The vowel pointings added into the Hebrew text of scripture are an invention of man. It is an added element to the scriptures that Yah did not deem necessary for us to understand. I feel the scriptures are best left without added elements. I have learned to read the Hebrew language without using them. I do encourage the learning of the vowel point sounds as a separate course of study, so that better pronunciation can be achieved. Just learning the sounds is fairly simple.

In the following charts, I am not listing the verb tenses that are determined by vowel pointings alone. These are not recognized as originally given in the scriptures. The original is simpler and easier to learn. Trying to learn all of the changes in vowel points and charts for verb forms, along with many complicated terms, can be very difficult to learn, but using only the actual prefixes and suffixes given in scripture is fairly simple. The context of a word being used, will explain on its own what the verb action is.

First Occurrences

Every first occurrence of a word in the Hebrew text is underlined in the text. This may be interesting for those who like to study first occurrences of words. Not only is each first occurrence underlined, but also each occurrence of a word in any given form is underlined. So if a root word has occurred before, but it now appears with either prefixes or suffixes attached to the word, it will also be underlined if it has not occurred in that particular form before.

Blank Pages

At the end of each chapter, if there is space left on the page when a chapter ends, the next chapter will start on its own separate page. I left it this way, because I thought that it might be helpful to people who would like to take notes. This way a person may make an asterisk or some other kind of mark by a verse, and then write his notes at the end of the chapter.

Suffix and Prefix combinations

Many of the prefixes and suffixes can come together in different combinations. I will give a few examples, to give a general idea. Normally, you will find that the rules don't change when these are combined, only that you apply both. Let's look at the Hebrew word שמר- "to guard". In Hebrew a verb appears in the past tense form when it is in its basic form -"שמר" = "guarded".

A plural form is made by using the ו suffix such as - ושמר = "they guarded" .

If you add a י prefix in combination - ישמרו = they shall guard.

Here, the ו designates the plural- "they", and the י designates the future tense- "shall".

If you add a vav (reverses the tense) to the existing form - וישמרו = "and they guarded"

שמר = guarded

ושמר = they guarded

וישמרו = and they guarded

Let's do another one using the same verb.

שמר = he guarded

תשמר = you (fem. plural) guarded

תשמרי = you (fem. plural) shall guard

Tav prefix & Vav suffix combination = Ye shall

ושמרתם = Ye shall guard

If you refer back to the above chart, you will see that the prefixes and suffixes didn't change in their meanings but just combine with each other to determine- who is doing the action(i.e.- fem. plural), and what the tense is- (completed action, or future \ ongoing action)

Two suffix combinations

Sometimes two suffixes are used together. When this happens, the first suffix reflects the subject of the verb (the one doing the action), and the second suffix reflects the object of the verb (the one receiving the action).

שמרתיך= "I have guarded you"

Noun derivatives

Some letters when added to the front, back, or into the middle of a word, create a noun out of a verb or adjective.

The prefixes- , can change a word into a noun.

The suffixes- , , , , , can change a word into a noun.

The infixes (letters inserted into a word) – , can change a word into a noun.

Please note that some of these prefixes, suffixes, and infixes can have other functions as listed in the other charts. A prefix, suffix, or infix added to a word that is a noun, won't mean the same thing when added to a verb. Sometimes the function of the added letter is best determined by the context it is used in.

Example of an adjective that is changed by these letters-

= righteous (adjective)

= righteous one (noun)

= righteousness (noun)

Plural endings

= masculine plural ending

= feminine plural ending

Verb forms (only ones that can be determined by an added letter)

= the action of the verb is happening to the subject – when added to the front of a verb.

= "He was guarded" rather than - "he guarded".

= To cause the action to happen to someone else – when added to the front of a verb.

= "He caused him to be guarded", or "put under protection".

= Doing an action to yourself – when added to the front of a verb.

= "he guarded himself"

= added to the front of a verb, can also give the meaning of ongoing action, kind of like adding an ing to a verb in English.

 = "he is guarding"

Infix letters

The "inserting" of either a ו or a ה into the midst of a verb can change the tense of the verb. These for the most part, are similar to the adding of the י to the front of a word. When a ו or a ה are inserted into the middle of a word they usually denote ongoing action. (Remember they can also be used to change a word into a noun. Context will determine their use)

שׁוֹמֵר = "is guarding" (inserted after the first letter)

שָׁמוּר = " is guarded" (inserted after the second letter)

The usage of the inserted ו or ה may be accompanied by some of the before mentioned prefixes and suffixes.

Gender

The Hebrew language is gender specific. The word for every object will be either masculine or feminine. This does not determine whether that object or thing is either a male or a female, just that the word used for it is in either a masculine or feminine form. For example, the word for a "beast" is a feminine form. This does not tell us whether the beast is a male or a female, for it can be either. Other examples would be the Hebrew words for spirit or soul. David said in Psalm 34 "my soul makes her boast in YHWH". Here once again we see that it is the soul of someone who is masculine, yet the soul or spirit of that man will always be in the feminine form. Another example is that the Spirit of Elohim is always used in the feminine form as in the case of any spirit that is talked about. The Spirit of YAH is no more feminine than the spirit of David is, and HE is definitely NOT a she. That is an abominable teaching. So it is important to know certain rules of grammar to stay out of error. Some people know just enough Hebrew to be dangerous!

Accompanying verbs will also reflect the gender of the subject being talked about. If the subject is masculine, then the verb will be also, and if the subject is feminine, then the verb will be too. In Hebrew a verb in its most basic form appears in the singular masculine form, it is changed by either a prefix or a suffix to denote the feminine form. If these are not present, then the masculine gender is to be assumed.

Plural forms

Another grammar rule in Hebrew is that the verb will also reflect the NUMBER of the Subject. If it is talking about one man, then the verb will be in its basic form and not have attached prefixes or suffixes that will denote either gender or plural. Therefore, again, if a word is in its basic form, then it is both in the singular form, and in the masculine gender. It takes attachments to the word to denote otherwise. As with gender the number is denoted by an attachment. In the case of plurality, this will come in the form of a suffix. Because English is such a "dumbed down" language and contains no specific form to determine whether "you" means either "you" (plural), or "you" (singular), I have used in the translation either the older English form "Ye" which is specifically "you" (plural). I use the current form "you" only when referring to "you" (singular). In some cases when I don't use the older form "ye" for the plural pronoun, I instead have used "you" followed by "(pl)" to indicate that the pronoun is plural. I also often use "(masc.)" and "(fem)" to denote whether the pronoun is either masculine or feminine.

KEY for reading the English translation.

The > symbol is used to express a variation of meanings within the same Hebrew word. The words are then listed in order of frequency.

When looking at a phrase where the > symbol is used, you should exchange only the last word used before the > symbol. For example, if the translation reads "and he met > called them", the phrase is to be read as either "and he met them" OR "and he called them". The ONLY words that are exchanged in the meaning is "met" the word that appears before the > symbol, and "called" the word that appears after the > symbol. Otherwise the rest of the phrase is to be read through. (There are a few cases where either one phrase, or the other phrase is to be read, but in most cases you should read the phrase through, only exchanging the word before and after the > symbol.)

Reading this way will become much easier to do with practice. It was absolutely necessary that this translation was done this way, in order to keep it as concise as possible.

The * symbol is used to separate two different Hebrew words that are spelled exactly the same way. When you run into this symbol in the translation, you must not read the phrase past this symbol. It represents a complete break in thought. The \ symbol means-use either the phrase before or after the symbol, not both. When this is the case, the most frequently used Hebrew word is listed first, and then the lesser used Hebrew word is used next, etc. I put them in order of frequency to aid with easier reading. That way the reader can attempt to read the sentence using the first word given. Then if it does not make sense, he can read the sentence again using the next possible definition / word. If you are familiar with Strong's numbers; the > symbol would represent different meanings within the SAME Strong's number, but the \ symbol is used for separating between different words with DIFFERENT Strong's numbers.
Here is an example from Genesis 1:13. My English translation reads like this.
and it came to pass > became > he was evening \ pledge \ swarm \ raven \ mix and it came to pass > became > he was cattle > herd > oxen \ morning day three > third.

In this example, the first word would be; "and it came to pass", or "and it became", or "and he was".
The second word would read just as listed; except that you would read only one of the meanings listed.
When reading this verse, I would read it this way –
And it became evening and it became morning day three.
I arrive at this by choosing which word or phrase seems to fit better with the context and sentence.
Therefore I chose "and it became" rather than "and it came to pass" or "and he was"
Then I chose "evening" rather than "pledge, swarm, raven, or mix" because these meanings don't make sense with the context.
Then I chose "morning" rather than "cattle, herd, or oxen", because these meanings don't make sense with the context either.
"Day" is the only choice for the next Hebrew word because this Hebrew word does not have any other meaning.
Then I chose "three", because I felt it read best that way.

The </ symbol combination represents meanings within the same strongs number, but requires a complete break of thought from the previous definition. In this case, the phrase does not "read through". It requires that you use either the preceding phrase or the next phrase, but not using both, or combining them.
An example of this would be my translation for the Hebrew word "hayoo" – they were > are >/ ye shall be
As you see. The definitions are related, but you would read either the first or the second reading. Not both.

Another symbol I use is the " symbol. When this symbol comes before a word(s), then it means- use the word(s) that started the previous meaning and then read the following word(s). When the " symbol is used after a word(s), it means to read the word(s) listed and then add the word(s) that ended the previous meaning. It will make more sense by looking at the next example.
And they went down \ "do rule
This would read either as "and they went down", or "and they do rule".
"and they" is replaced with the symbol- " in order to save space.

It is important that only one meaning is read, and not all, otherwise the translation will not make sense!
